

The New Beatitudes

2003

Beloved one, in a time seemingly long ago it was asked of me, "Rabbi, how does one live the blessed life? How does one live happy in accordance with God?" And I spoke with you what is now recorded in your scriptures as The Beatitudes : "Blessed are they...." And what you have recorded in your scripture are the notes that one remembered from that discourse and that time.

I would give unto you this day new beatitudes in a language that is of this time. Today I would speak plainly with you, and I would say to you first of all, Blessed are you as you will abide in a place of nonjudgment , a place of openness, a place where you acknowledge that you do not know enough to judge and you ask for the higher understanding. "I will suspend judgment and allow myself to see through the eyes of the Father - not to see with the human eyes which have been so trained to be reactionary. I will allow myself to be in the space of the Father, Who does not judge. I will just behold."

Blessed are you as you become again the little child who does not have all of the teaching of the world . Blessed are you as you are spontaneous, questioning, wanting to know, "What is this all about, this life experience? Who are you? Who am I?" Blessed are you, happy are you, as you allow yourself to be again the natural child who has not been shaped, constricted, formed to the world, but knows itself to be free, to be the Child of the Father. Blessed are you as you remember the feeling of the little child who knows that he/she is loved of the Father. Become again as the little Child.

Blessed are you as you are willing to be the friend to another . For as you are willing to be a friend to another you know friendship for yourself. If you desire to have a friend - you have a saying - be a friend. For as you are willing to set aside small self and to look deep within the eyes of another one and to say, "I recognize Who you are," then you know true friendship, for friends are equals. Friends know each other to be the holy Child of the Father.

Blessed are you as you will give forth compassion . Passion means to feel, to be alive with deep emotion. And to be compassionate means to be with another one in their passion. So as you will allow yourself to be one with another, to know compassion, to know their passion and to meet them in the place of oneness, you also know passion for yourself and for your own life.

Blessed are you as you acknowledge the Source of your being , as you acknowledge the Source of your prosperity, as you acknowledge the Source of the health of your body. Blessed are you when you acknowledge that the Source is within, the Father, the Life energy, the spirit of you, and will withdraw your worry from the world. For the world will speak to you of lack and of limitation, and you do not feel blessed in that place; you feel hounded on all sides.

Blessed are you as you will seek after wisdom , and will allow that wisdom to take you past the belief of the world. It will allow you to see that wisdom has come through what you would know as the ancient writings and the present day writings. Happy are you as you allow yourself to come past the confines of the limitation of world belief.

Blessed are you as you will seek after Truth . Wisdom will allow you to begin the search for Truth. It allows you to open the door to the on-goingness of Life, and you will understand that the truth of one lifetime is but that. And the truth of another lifetime is but that, but what runs through all of the lifetimes is the Truth of your being. That Truth is what has allowed you to manifest the experiences, to know the lifetimes. Blessed are you as you will seek after Truth, for you will find it and you will come Home.

Blessed are you as you are willing to live in the now moment , not worrying about what has been, not judging self for how you could have done something else, could have done it better, should have done it better. Blessed are you as you will live in the now moment, not worrying about the future. Blessed are you as you will give the future over to the Father, saying "Father, I know that You are with me now, here in this now moment, and I know that You will be with me wherever and whenever I go." Blessed are you, happy are you as you will allow yourself to live in the now moment.

Blessed are you as you will remember and acknowledge the Father's Love. Blessed are you as you will acknowledge here and now, "I am the blessed one. How fortunate I am!" Get you up in every morning with that saying. It will transform your day. "I am the blessed one." And you are.

Those are your new beatitudes. Blessed are you as you will allow yourself to live in the now moment, knowing that each moment you are blessed of the Father. You are loved of the Father. You are His most wonderful and only creation, and I love that which He has created. I love my Self. So be it.
